Last night Miss Rogers, as "Maud Muller, rendered herself attractive and interesting to an appreciative audience at the Memphis Theater. She has given satisfaction to our people in the rendition of the above role, the charming simplicity of which she portrays so naturally, and, therefore, most agreeably.

The play itself is not a great dramatic creation, but the character of "Mand Muller," as rendered by Miss Rogers, is one of true merit and graceful elegance. As Miss Rogers takes a benefit to-night, there will doubtless be a full house. The play is worth seeing, for Miss Rogers gives life and beauty and at-traction to its central figure, "Maud Muller."
